Toronto Seminar/Reunion a Success!

CHOC's March 30th day-long adoption event at the Holiday Inn Toronto-Markham was a very positive experience for some 200 participants.

The morning information session focused on the interests of parents-to-be considering adoption from Russia. Featured speakers included Arnie Gotfryd, founder and director of Caring Homes for Orphan Children; social worker Marie Artt, and Dr. Valeri Kogan, renowned expert on Russian orphanage children.

Especially enlightening were the candid narratives and multi-media presentations by four adoptive families who kindly shared their adoption experiences with the group. Special thanks go to Adele and Malcolm Buck, Lucie and Phil King, Tamara and Dr. Brian Goldman, and Maureen and Randy Roe for their participation.

During the buffet luncheon, adoptive families, resource people, and preadopters were able to network and discuss things on a more personal basis.

Meanwhile, the children had a wonderful time with the indoor Fun Fair supplied for the occasion by Hart Entertainment. The younger children enjoyed the various inflatables, activity centers, and clown while the older children challenged each other to soccer kicks, basketball shots, foosball, and carnival games.

All the children gathered to sing and wish a Happy Birthday to Casey MacKay whose 7th birthday happened to fall on this day.

We were fortunate to have received very favourable media coverage by several Toronto area newspapers and a long spot on CFTO news. It was a much welcomed happy story in contrast to much of the media coverage of intercountry adoption.

Listservs: An Excellent Resource

Internet Listservs are an excellent way for people with common interests to share information and get answers on any issue. CHOC participates in 9 Yahoo Listservs.

For those interested in adopting, you can follow and participate in discussions with parents-to-be, parents and resource people. The following are popular adoption listservs for Canadians:

Adoption_Canada
Canada_Adoption_International
Canadiansadopting
InfertilityNetwork
Ont_Int'l_Adoption

It's actually not difficult to join such groups. Go to www.yahoo.com - Groups - New User - and then add the above groups. We opt to receive the "digest" format, which is a more efficient way to keep up to date.

One of our recent postings to these Listservs was entitled: "Should Canada Switch to Apostille?" (April 13th, 2003) We discussed the benefits of Canada opting in to the international convention on the legalization of documents in order to streamline the adoption process to save months of time and thousands of dollars in adoption costs.

The responses we received have directed us to unexpected resources and issues that will help us determine if and how to proceed with lobbying on this issue.

Health Matters ~ Attachment

Children adopted from institutional settings are special in that they may have experienced neglect, abandonment, and multiple changes in caregivers. As a result, the potential for attachment related problems with orphanage children, although low, is higher than average.

Many institutionalized children do not suffer from attachment issues or disorders. In the large majority of cases, the adopted child will bond fully with their adoptive parents, at their own pace. The pace of progress of attachment is influenced by such factors as the child's nature and character, early experiences, and the quality and quantity of attention and stimulation both in the orphanage and in the child's new home.

Attachment has been defined as a "reciprocal process by which an emotional connection develops between an infant and his primary caretaker. It shapes how the child will relate to the world, learn, and form relationships throughout life." (quote from The Natural Child by Jan Hunt ~ this book is highly acclaimed by Mothering Magazine)

An attachment disorder is considered a "condition in which individuals have difficulty forming loving, lasting, intimate relationships". (Institute for Attachment)

You should consult your pediatrician if your child persistently exhibits the following symptoms:

- An inability to give or receive affection.
- Lack of cause-and-effect thinking.
- Inability to empathize with others or feel remorse.

- Cheating, lying, and stealing.
- Manipulating others.

There are many ways parents can help their children bond and build attachment: Some include:

- Eye contact, smiling
- Floor time, interactive play
- Holding hands while walking.
- Holding, hugging, kissing.
- Massaging child's feet or back

Travel Tips

To get the most out of your trip to Russia, schedule your sightseeing in advance. In the case of a one trip process, you will have 10-14 days free in the middle.

In the two trip process, the best timing is to take in the sights on the first trip, after you have seen your child several times and completed the medical evaluation and paperwork. That way instead of rushing back from a high-paced Russian adventure to your high paced daily routine, you will get a much needed break to unwind, take in your child's native culture, and celebrate your great expectations. After all who knows when you will next get a holiday without the kid(s)?

May in Russia

May 1st and 2nd is the International Labour Day and Spring Festival in Russia. On this day singing and fireworks take place to honour workers and the arrival of spring. May 9th is Victory Day.
